

TED TIDBITS...

Starting off this week with the classic tale of the season... The flag is flying at half mast as Billy, after laving the British Legion, is walking into the football ground car park. He is stopped by John Paton, Chairman, who asks 'whose dead?' Billy replied (thinking he had asked 'where's Ted?') 'Ted...he's upstairs selling half time draw tickets'. Now, I don't mind going upstairs to the pearly gates when I have to, but selling half time draw tickets when I'm there is another matter!! I doubt whether they would have a license for them anyway...

The game against Berwick Rangers was spoilt by bad referring and hopeless linemen. Berwick's first goal was at least 10 yards offside and their use of their hands made me thin I was watching rugby union football. Montrose played well, but for set pieces against them which let us down again and we must learn to keep our mouths closed when the referee makes a decision, even when we know it's the wrong one! We are getting better and improving every game. Well done team, keep it up.

We have a coach laid on to Queen's Park on 8th April departing Links Park at 11am. Cost £5 per person. A good day out and a chance for those who have never been before to see the National Stadium and museum.

Cheers!
